

• Collaboration and Co-Planning Using a Universal Design for Learning Framework •

Presenter: Jen Patenaude, M.A.

Target Audience: Ideally, teams of general education teachers and special education teachers. The content would also benefit coaches and administrators in their support roles for teachers.

High quality first instruction from expert teachers is one of the most powerful influences on student learning. Educators must ensure that all of their learners have access to this high-quality instruction. Simply put, if students can't access the instruction, they won't make progress. Given the great variability in today's classrooms, how do we ensure that our approach can reach all learners?

In this workshop series, participants will identify the most common barriers to accessing learning within classrooms and across curricula, and practice with tools and resources designed to mitigate those barriers. We will also discuss systems for collaboration and co-planning that ensure a proactive, preventative approach, including the three principles of Universal Design for Learning – Multiple Means of Engagement, Representation, and Action/Expression

Workshop #1 - October 3	What is UDL-Based Co-Planning, and Where Does It Fit within a Comprehensive MTSS? Register for Day 1
Workshop #2 - October 30	Multiple Means of Engagement: The “Why” of Learning Register for Day 2
Workshop #3 - December 11	Multiple Means of Representation: The “What” of Learning Register for Day 3
Workshop #4 - January 10	Multiple Means of Action and Expression: The “How” of Learning Register for Day 4
