

• Connecting the Dots: Using Best Practices to Support
Infants, Toddlers, and Their Families •

A Workshop Series/Course Opportunity for Early Interventionists,
Early Childhood Educators, and Related Professionals

This four-part Connecting the Dots series has cross-cutting themes: the importance of relationships, understanding development, responsive and individualized care and learning experiences, collaboration, and family engagement. The four workshops are presented by experts in their respective fields who will provide interactive, integrated learning experiences that blend theory and practice.

Final Workshop in the Series!

Workshop #4 – Family Engagement in the 21st Century: Working with Families and Each Other (May 3, 2018)

Dr. John Hornstein returns to conclude the series. In this last workshop, he will delve into family-centered practices and strategies for engaging families of infants and toddlers, including families whose children have special needs. He will discuss collaborating with families and professionals (e.g., home visitors, physical and occupational therapists, early childhood mental health consultants) to promote children's healthy development.
