

• Transforming Trauma • Helping Schools Become Healing Communities

Presenter: David Melnick, LICSW

Target Audience: These workshops are appropriate for PK-12 educators.

School professionals are increasingly being asked to work with highly complex students who have been exposed to chronic trauma. In these situations, conventional approaches to academics, behavior, and relationship-building can feel frustrating and sometimes counterproductive. This workshop will focus on the impact that chronic trauma has on the developing child, including an in-depth exploration of the neurobiology of stress. Contemporary research, as well as educational and clinical practice, have helped to clarify the expansive effects of chronic trauma. These effects are often referred to as the “Seven Domains of Impairment” (National Child Traumatic Stress Network). We will study these Seven Domains with an eye towards their application in the school system and focus on ways to transform knowledge into action. The interventions and strategies will be compatible with, and build upon, many current initiatives designed to support a positive school culture and climate for all students.

Workshop participants will:

- Increase their knowledge of the impacts of traumatic stress on a child.
- Learn and apply the “Seven Domains of Impairment” to their work setting.
- Increase their understanding of the neurobiology of stress, use dependence, and vicarious trauma.
- Increase their understanding of the unique and innovative strategies necessary to address traumatic stress.
- Study and implement various models of buffering the effects of ongoing stress to help improve a student’s resilience and accountability.
